DR BRETT GILLIS

Brett Gillis is a Coral Gables enthusiast, historian and preservationist. He holds a doctorate in the health sciences and a certificate in intercultural communications. A semester abroad during his undergrad work took him to Rome to study classical art and architecture, and he has traveled extensively throughout the Americas studying New World architecture. Supporting the arts and championing historic preservation are daily passions—his projects have advanced the understanding and appreciation of local history and the built environment. Dr. Gillis is a member of numerous non-profits and a regular contributor to media outlets. He is currently drafting the manuscript to his first full-fledged book, “The History of Coral Gables.”
