City employees may be temporarily unable to report to work due to possible COVID-19 exposure or quarantines related to COVID-19, which might impact essential governmental functions. Training new employees to serve in the positions of police officer and communications officer requires significant time and resources, which may be better utilized in support of the City's response to COVID-19. Retired City police officers and communications officers possess the necessary skills and training to immediately assist with the City's COVID-19 response. The City's essential governmental functions should not be hindered by the termination and reemployment limitations, including the 30-day break in service requirement for those employees returning on a part-time basis, pertaining to recently retired essential personnel during the COVID-19 state of emergency. It is necessary and appropriate to take action to ensure that COVID-19 remains controlled, and that residents and visitors of the City remain safe and secure
